

The Queeny Lewis House

Some of Carl's earliest memories happened when the Hewett family lived in the Queeny Lewis House in 1929. Across the way from this house was an ancient Indian cemetery. Carl vividly remembered seeing all kinds of lights coming from that old cemetery. It made an impression on the young boys mind, but it would take over a quarter of a century until Carl understood that those lights were actually the Spirit bodies of the Indians, who would still gather together in that cemetery.

Another phenomenon was occurring at that time. The Hewett family would frequently awaken in the morning to find writing on the walls. None of the children had written the writing, because it was in "a foreign tongue." No one in the family could read the writing. Often when the writing was touched, it was still warm.

Alvie was convinced that the devil was doing the writing, and never did any research to discover what language was being written and therefore would never learn what the messages said. In all fairness, it was during the depression, and there was no money to hire a college teacher to come and translate the messages. It is unfortunate that no one recorded or photographed what was being written.

This certainly duplicates the famous writing on the wall story found in the Bible in Daniel chapter 5. This is a perfect example of what Carl would often say from his pulpit.

"The laws of psychic science have never changed. What happened in biblical times can still happen today, provided the correct conditions exist."
