

The White Owl

I had been visiting Carl on the weekends for a period of time. I stayed at his house, which Carl called Ramblewood Acres. Many Southerners named their homes, and everyone referred to Carl's house as Ramblewood. The property had a fence around it, and much of the back yard was surrounded with trees. When visiting Ramblewood, one felt as if one fell off the face of the earth. You had the sense that no one else existed in the world.

The window of Carl's bedroom faced the back yard. Carl had created a dog cemetery on the corner of his back yard. Many of his dogs were buried there. He even had short posts with a rope going through the posts to "fence off" the cemetery.

One morning Carl looked out his bedroom window toward the dog cemetery. There on the rope fence was a very large white owl. Carl called for me to come look at this unusual site. "I think someone put a plastic owl on the fence," Carl said.

A few moments later, the owl moved his head. Then we both knew that it was a real owl, which still remained rather still on the rope. Carl then called Lenny into his bedroom, and asked Lenny if he would take some pictures of the owl. Lenny got out his 35-mm camera, and put on his zoom lens. He took several pictures of the owl.

The owl remained at the house for a few days. He did not stay there all day, but for several mornings, the owl was perched on the rope fence.

About a week later, Lenny went to visit Carl in Carl's reading room. Lenny had a puzzled look on his face. He handed Carl some pictures. Here are the pictures that you wanted me to take. Carl looked at the pictures of the dog cemetery. "What are so special about this pictures?" Carl asked.

These are the pictures I took of the owl, but for some reason, the owl is not in the pictures.

Carl immediately realized that the owl was not a physical owl, but an owl, which was made from Spiritual energy. This is why the owl was not photographed.

Later, Carl realized that the owl was a message for him to "Wise Up!" Carl was about to do something, which he would later regret. However, Carl did not understand the message, and did regret his actions.

Many years after this event, we discovered that the Hewitt Coat of Arms contained 3 owls on it.
