

Predicting His Sister's Death

One day when Carl was four years old, he had a clairvoyant vision. He saw his sister Annie dying. Annie lived only four miles from where the Hewett family was staying. Carl was very upset, and began crying. He ran to his mother, Goldie and put his arms around her. "Annie's gonna die! Annie's gonna die!" Carl exclaimed. Goldie was outraged at what Carl had just said. She immediately began spanking Carl, while scolding Carl with a rather sharp tone in her voice, "How dare you say such a terrible thing!" This only made Carl cry more.

About twenty minutes later, Dewey, one of Carl's half-brothers came running into the house. He was hysterical. He shouted, "Annie is dead!"

Goldie turned her head slowly in Carl's direction, with her mouth wide open. She had the most puzzled look on her face, trying to figure out how Carl could possibly have known that Annie died.

